STORIES from India
Youth 4 Jobs Foundation

Youth 4 Jobs Foundation is an action organisation with a heart working to ensure youth with disabilities can be poverty-free in India. Our focus is on building resilient livelihoods for both youth with disabilities, with a focus on the most vulnerable, women with disabilities. Towards this, we partner with governments, markets, and civil society to remove physical and attitudinal barriers and enable the scaling of evidence-based effective solutions. It is led by Meera Shenoy who has the unique experience of working in senior government positions, World Bank and UNDP. This transformational work has won several national and international awards. Our initiatives include SwaraJAbility, a job platform representing 21 disabilities, and the Global Ability Photography Challenge through NotJustArtGlobal, aimed at promoting the work of disabled visual artists.

Zero Project

Founded by Austrian non-profit Essl Foundation in 2008, the Zero Project is a global and research-driven initiative to support the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD).

It focuses its efforts on the topics of Education, Employment, Accessibility, Independent Living and Political Participation & ICT. Over the past decade, Zero Project has established a global network of 10,000+ experts, policy makers, corporates, academics, and other persons with and without disabilities who are advancing the implementation of the CRPD. This network contributes to the Zero Project’s work and continues to grow, fostering a global community for disability inclusion.

CONTEXT

Paving the Way for Inclusion and Empowerment

In the intricate tapestry of our global society, the voices and struggles of women with disabilities often remain muted, their challenges overshadowed by broader issues. This silence, both on a global scale and within the specific context of India, amplifies the vulnerabilities these women face—underscoring the urgent need for targeted initiatives and inclusive policies.

Globally, women with disabilities navigate through a landscape marred by underrepresentation, discrimination, and a lack of agency in decision-making processes. In India, these challenges are magnified, with disparities in education, employment, and societal perceptions further complicating the journey of women with disabilities.

The need for dedicated efforts to address these disparities becomes increasingly evident. This context sets the stage for the birth of the Women Entrepreneurs with Disabilities (WEDO) initiative, a pioneering endeavor of Youth4Jobs. WEDO emerges as a response to the critical gaps within the entrepreneurial ecosystem that hinder the meaningful inclusion of women with disabilities.

Unveiling the Unseen - Global Perspective

In the international arena, women with disabilities grapple with pervasive discrimination. According to the European Institute on Gender Equality (2021), a mere 20% of women with disabilities in the European Union secure full-time employment, lagging significantly behind their male counterparts (29%) and women without disabilities (48%). This stark inequality in employment opportunities is just one facet of a broader pattern that encompasses income disparities, lower education levels, and unmet health needs.

Indian Landscape

Turning our gaze to India, the situation is even more disconcerting. The Society for Disability and Rehabilitation Studies highlights — women with disabilities in India face unequal treatment in employment. Societal perceptions often strip them of their capabilities, casting doubts on their ability to earn and lead independent lives. Studies in Karnataka's Raichur district reveal a myriad of challenges, including under employment, unemployment, low incomes, and societal prejudices, adding layers to the complex narrative. Government data reveals a stark reality—out of the 26.9 million Indians with disabilities, only 23% of disabled women are employed.

Entrepreneurial Ecosystem Gaps

Within the entrepreneurial landscape, there exists a glaring lack of support for women entrepreneurs with disabilities. Accessibility issues, both physical and programmatic, hinder entry and growth in entrepreneurship. Incubators and accelerators often lack infrastructure and programming designed to accommodate the unique needs of women with disabilities, exacerbating the challenges they face.

Recognizing the Urgency for Change - the birth of WEDO

WEDO is a response to the challenges faced by women entrepreneurs with disabilities, aiming to break barriers, create opportunities, and champion inclusivity within the entrepreneurial ecosystem. It recognizes the untapped potential within this demographic and seeks to unlock it collectively.

Our aspirations for this movement include:

- Equal access to entrepreneurial opportunities, resources, and support systems.
- Inclusive entrepreneurship ecosystems globally, fostering growth and innovation.
- Empowering women with disabilities economically and changing societal perceptions.
- Advocating for policy reforms and fostering global collaboration. Establishing holistic support systems and cultivating empowered leaders.

By embracing a global perspective, the initiative aims to transcend boundaries, create meaningful connections, and foster a collective movement towards empowering women with disabilities on a global stage.
For the last 20 plus years, I have been working with underprivileged youth, training them and linking them to sustained livelihoods. My experience shows more vulnerable the youth, greater is the impact of a job or enterprise on their lives.

Reflecting this philosophy is our latest pioneering initiative, WEDO, launched in Zero Project India, which focuses on helping the most disadvantaged — women with disabilities, become entrepreneurs.

During Covid, our help lines were jammed with women with disabilities saying they too wanted skills, and money in their pockets through local jobs or nano enterprises. These were the most needy but least visible, like young widows and young mothers with disabilities. Statistics about them are stunning. Women with disabilities are far below men with disability, on every indicator, be it health, education or employment. There was a high incidence of sexual exploitation as many of them are voiceless. Yet, even in gender initiatives, intersectionality is ignored. So, women with disabilities get ignored by CSR /poverty alleviation funds which focus on gender issues.

Can we sensitize women, like the large self-help group networks, to disability, in partnership with governments and community? Can we give women with disabilities a voice through the path we know best – skilling for jobs and enterprises? Studies on our own work show clearly Economic empowerment means social acceptance even for young men and women with disabilities in the community. And the entire family benefits if money is in the hands of women.
When we decided to do a booklet on journeys of women entrepreneurs with disabilities, my research team repeatedly told me how hard it was to find good examples. These stories, encapsulate the resilience and determination of extraordinary women who have defied odds and, in doing so, are beacons of inspiration and hope for society. We hope, through WEDO, to first sensitise at least 1 million women about disability.

And break barriers, create opportunities, and champion the cause of at least 10,000 women entrepreneurs with disabilities. The idea is to demonstrate through hard data a working model at scale in India.

In publishing our upcoming booklet, we aim to showcase the inspiring stories of extraordinary women who, against all odds, have become beacons of inspiration. Their narratives underscore the importance of creating an inclusive space within the entrepreneurial landscape. WEDO is not just an initiative; it's a movement toward building a more inclusive entrepreneurship ecosystem.

Do join this movement from any part of the world to build a more inclusive entrepreneurship ecosystem. Share your best practises, your inspirational unheard stories, to create a global network of WEDO together.

Youth4Jobs
The Zero Project stands for a collaborative approach to creating a world with zero barriers for persons with disabilities. In our research we identify innovative solutions from all sectors of society and all geographies that advance the implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

These innovative solutions have demonstrated to be powerful drivers of change, and it’s important to note their potential impact when replicated or scaled to new regions. Through our work, we see outstanding innovations developed by women entrepreneurs, which is even more significant considering what they achieve against the backdrop of facing multiple layers of discrimination all too often.

Through its WEDO initiative, Youth4Jobs responds to these issues of equity and intersectionality that need to be urgently addressed.

The Zero Project is proud have Youth4Jobs as strategic partner to drive innovation in India and we fully support their initiative to remove barriers through a collaborative and solution-oriented approach.

If you get it right for women with disabilities, you will get it right for all women.
AARTI LAXMAN RASTOGI
Founder: Artinci
AARTI LAXMAN RASTOGI

Aarti Laxman Rastogi, a woman of resilience and entrepreneurial spirit, has been shaping a unique narrative in the realm of sugar-free indulgence for everyday life. Despite facing an 80 percent hearing loss, she turned her passion for healthy food into a reality through the founding of Artinci in 2017. A former HR professional with over 15 years of experience, Aarti's journey to entrepreneurship was not only a shift in career but a profound realization of her lifelong love for food.

Her culinary journey began with a quest for a cleaner version of her favorite dessert – ice cream. Dissatisfied with artificial flavors and preservatives, she ventured into her kitchen, experimenting for five years. What started as a personal endeavor, soon transformed into Artinci – which has since evolved into a zero-sugar everyday indulgence brand that celebrates the authenticity of flavors and the goodness of natural ingredients.

Aarti’s journey as an entrepreneur is deeply intertwined with her advocacy for inclusive employment. Drawing on her experiences as an HR professional and her own hearing disability.

Artinci’s team includes individuals from marginalized communities, promoting equal opportunities and changing perceptions.
Navigating the entrepreneurial landscape posed its own set of challenges, from financial concerns to operational efficiency.

Aarti's hearing disability added complexity, but she turned it into her strength using Instant Messaging apps and AI-based live transcription for communication, planning and execution. Aarti's resilience and adaptability, along with support from her co-founder, Sumit and the entire Artinci team have not only kept Artinci afloat during challenging times like the pandemic but have also propelled the brand to greater visibility.

Aarti had an identity crisis in 2012 when she realized that her hearing had degenerated over time. She was in a slump for nearly a year, wondering and worrying about her future.

That is when she realized that she is focused on the wrong aspect of her life - she was overly focused on her disability, instead of all her other abilities. She turned to fitness - running and gym workouts - as a way to improve her mental health and decided to live life with her whole body and her entire being.

Aarti’s entrepreneurial journey transcends the realm of desserts. Her participation in the Xcelerator Bangalore 2021 cohort, a non-IT business accelerator program, in the IIMB-led Goldman Sachs 10000 Women 2022 Cohort, and in StrongHer. VC’s Arise Winter 2023 cohorts reflects her commitment to continuous learning and growth. As a woman entrepreneur with a hearing disability, Aarti's story serves as an inspiration, breaking stereotypes and paving the way for more inclusivity in the entrepreneurial ecosystem.
ADITI GANGRADE
Co-Founder: Much Much Media
ADITI GANGRADE

Aditi Gangrade, Co-founder and Chief Creative Officer of Much Much Media, a disability-led storytelling studio based in Mumbai, discovered her artistic talents while navigating life as an adult with Autism and ADHD. Her disability, however, is invisible, making it challenging for others to recognize without her disclosure. She talks about the limited understanding of autism and invisible disabilities, recounting her journey of late discovery and the journey of internalized ableism. Internalised ableism refers to the person with a disability adopting and believing in the stigmatising beliefs and stereotypes about their abilities, contributing to self-doubt, low self-esteem, and limitations on personal potential.

Growing up in a joint family, Aditi had a unique perspective on disability through her uncle, who was profoundly deaf. Due to his disabilities, the family viewed him as a liability, lacking awareness, resources, and accessibility. Aditi mentions how the family failed to learn sign language, leaving her uncle isolated. The prevailing attitude around her was that disability was undesirable, and consequently, disabled individuals were deemed undesirable as well.

Aditi’s childhood experiences shaped her internalised ableism, leading her to question her worthiness of accommodations and struggle to accept her autistic identity. Despite the societal pressure to conform to neurotypical norms, Aditi embarked on a journey of self-discovery and acceptance, breaking free from the constraints of internalised ableism.
In her pursuit of embracing neurodivergence, Aditi discovered her strengths as a visual thinker with a passion for design and filmmaking.

She co-founded Much Much Spectrum with her partner Aalap Deboor in 2022, where she directs and leads a team dedicated to creating content that educates, informs, entertains, and inspires. After their autism discovery, Aditi and Aalap noticed a dearth of stories and content on neurodiversity and disability. To normalise conversations on disability, they bootstrapped their venture Much Much Spectrum, an inclusive content studio, and data, insights & DEI consultancy.

Her ultimate goal with Much Much Spectrum is to tell one million stories covering topics such as mental health, neurodiversity, LGBTQAI+, gender, sexuality, climate, sustainability, and disability, among others.

Aditi directed the first non-fiction web series of Much Much Spectrum Originals, “Alag Hain Kam Nahi” chronicling the stories of 6 young adults with disabilities. The show was widely celebrated, reaching more than 5 million people and gaining recognition for its disability representation. As an intersectional feminist who loves to talk about inclusion, Aditi has started creating content across formats to address societal issues. Some of their original IPs include #RepUp, #RadDad, #RightToRights, #HowAboutAPlaydate, and #DontHateAccommodate, among others.

Aditi is also a public speaker, neurodiversity consultant, and podcaster. “Finding out about my neurodivergence is the most liberating thing that has ever happened to me.”

She lives by the motto, “We work for a few, we work well, WEDO what we love.”
ADITI VERMA
Founder: Aditi's Corner
ADITI VERMA

Aditi Verma's journey began with unique challenges when she was diagnosed with Down’s syndrome at birth. Fortunately, she was born into a family that embraced her differences, showering her with unwavering love and support to pursue her passions.

Her early years were marked by delayed milestones and physical limitations, including heart ailments that required open-heart surgery at the age of 2. Despite her obstacles, she gradually started walking and started her schooling. However, her disorder posed challenges in mainstream schools, leading her to special schools in Jaipur and later Pune, where Aditi found solace and support, gradually improving her academic and social skills.

Her family's relocation to Navi Mumbai marked a turning point. Enrolling in Swami Brahmanand Pratishthan at CBD Belapur, Navi Mumbai Maharashtra, Aditi honed her skills in sports, dance, drama, and rangoli, along with her academics. Her achievements in various fields brought recognition and accolades, instilling a newfound confidence.

Aditi gradually started to develop a strong desire to be her own boss. At 18, she transitioned to the vocational section, where she discovered her passion for cooking and baking. Inspiration struck when she observed a Chaiwala serving tea to offices. Proposing the idea to her mother, Aditi's Corner was born on January 1, 2016, a snack junction offering sandwiches, egg preparations, homemade lunch, and more. With the support of her family and two dedicated staff members, Aditi's Corner quickly became a reality.
Undeterred by challenges, Aditi's determination and focused work ethic propelled her business forward. Her initial sale, a humble Rs 250, was a symbolic beginning.

The turning point came when celebrity chef Vikas Khanna, visited her cafe, marking a significant milestone in her entrepreneurial journey. Aditi's positive transformation as an entrepreneur was evident. She became more active, physically capable, and adept at handling business affairs independently. Her cafe became a hub of support for other special children, with dreams of expanding to provide opportunities for them. Her achievements spoke volumes - from being elected as an Office Bearer for the Self Advocates Forum of India in 2016 to presenting at the India International Down Syndrome Conference in 2017.

She received honours from the Delhi government on Women's Day, and various awards, including the Lokmat Sakhi Samman Award for Business and the Rotary Club’s Entrepreneurship beyond Challenges Award in 2017. Aditi was conferred with the very prestigious Helen Keller award on 2nd Dec 2019, adding to her long list of achievements. Aditi’s Corner has reached its second anniversary, and Aditi has effectively expanded her business to include a new location at the NIEPID (National Institute of Persons with Intellectual Disabilities) Regional Center in Navi Mumbai. She now oversees operations at both outlets.

When asked about her future plans, Aditi expressed, "I aspire to train individuals and empower them to become self-reliant. I have already successfully trained two friends, aiding them in achieving financial independence." She proudly states, “When I can do it, then why can’t you?”. Aditi's story, resonating globally, received love and encouragement. Aditi envisions using her success to support special children, urging parents to trust their abilities. With unwavering support, she stands as a beacon of inspiration.

ANITA SHARMA
Founder: Drive On My Own Foundation
ANITA SHARMA

Born in Jaipur, Anita Sharma faced the daunting challenge of paralysis from the waist down at the delicate age of six months due to polio. Undeterred by this adversity, Anita underwent a series of multiple surgeries and received unwavering support from her parents, allowing her to eventually walk with the aid of crutches and callipers.

Her resilient spirit led her to pursue a Ph.D. in Management from the prestigious Indian Institute of Management (IIM) Indore, specialising in Disability and Entrepreneurship. Passionate about driving, Anita recognised that persons with disabilities (PwD) often encountered challenges in performing this simple task. Determined to make a difference, she began driving a retrofitted car, inspiring awe and admiration from onlookers, challenging stereotypes about the capabilities of individuals with disabilities.

Anita's journey took a transformative turn when she launched Project ‘Drive On My Own’, in Amritsar, Punjab, in May 2018. This initiative addressed a significant gap by offering tailored driving lessons for people with reduced mobility, by charging a nominal fee. Moreover, she allocated a portion of the fees to cross-subsidize driving training sessions for those in need, fostering a spirit of empowerment. Anita made the bold decision to quit her IIM professorship job in 2019, and formally launched her social enterprise - Drive On My Own Foundation.
Establishing the driving school wasn't without its challenges. Anita faced the uphill task of convincing PwD’s and their families to embrace the idea of driving lessons.

But beyond merely teaching driving lessons, she had a holistic approach fostering confidence and mental strength in adapting to physical changes. Through regular coffee conversations and a podcast series titled ‘Independent Living with a Disability’, Anita kept her students engaged. Her efforts resulted in conducting hundreds of workshops, and she trained over 250 individuals with disabilities, enabling them to buy their own cars. Her driving lessons and podcast have impacted more than 2 Lakh individuals with disabilities and their well-wishers.

Anita's commitment to creating public awareness and inclusivity remains the driving force behind 'Drive On My Own’.

She actively educates on various aspects of buying and owning a car, such as car modification, GST concessions, driving licence regulations, road tax exemptions, insurance and on related topics like travel in India, public transport accessibility, universal design, diversity, equity, and inclusion, among others. Leveraging social media platforms, Anita shares success stories of disabled drivers, and dispels myths about disability aiming to create awareness and inspire others.

Anita envisions a future where wheelchair users can experience greater mobility, including the possibility of cars accommodating wheelchairs directly, highlighting her dedication to breaking barriers and creating a more accessible world for individuals with disabilities.

Founder: Chronic Pain India
ANUBHA MAHAJAN

Armed with a Master’s Diploma in Social Entrepreneurship from TISS, Mumbai, Anubha assumed the role of an SDG Ambassador for SDG Choupal, focusing her energy on goals 3, 4, 5, 8, 10, and 11. She serves as a facilitator for the Theatre of the Oppressed. Furthermore, she holds the role of a Purple Ambassador for Chronic Neurological Conditions at the International Purple Fest in Goa for the year 2024.

Anubha's life took an unexpected turn following a car accident in 2014, which left her with an injury in her left leg. She was diagnosed with Complex Regional Pain Syndrome (CRPS) in 2015 as a result of medical negligence. Enduring a maze of misdiagnoses and countless medical tests, she experienced the challenges faced by chronically ill patients within the healthcare system. Fortunate in her understanding as a doctor, Anubha realized the dire need for awareness in the field of chronic pain in India.

Her encounter with a lady at her gym silently battling Fibromyalgia devoid of family support became a poignant representation of the struggles faced by many. This encounter became a catalyst for Anubha's resolve to make a difference. Anubha initiated her journey by engaging with friends and participating in disability-focused organizations. In June 2017, she established a Twitter account named Chronic Pain India, with the primary goal of providing individuals a space to express their chronic pain experiences.
Concurrently, the website chronicpainindia.com was launched. Within a short span, Anubha observed a significant number of individuals eager to share their stories and cope with the challenges posed by their conditions.

Subsequently, the initiative expanded its presence to various online platforms, including Instagram, Facebook, Pinterest, and LinkedIn.

Chronic Pain India which operates on the principles of a medico-social model, is dedicated to constructing a robust community for every chronic pain warrior in India by raising awareness about various chronic illnesses, rare diseases, and invisible disabilities with one key symptom of chronic pain

The organization encourages patients to come forward, share their experiences, and facilitate timely access to medical support. Through support groups and workshops, they empower individuals to navigate the multifaceted aspects of living with a chronic illness. Simultaneously, Chronic Pain India collaborates with doctors and medical professionals, conducting workshops and online sessions to catalyze awareness. The exchange of afflictions and observations among pain warriors provides medical professionals with a unique perspective, fostering a deeper understanding of their patients.

Chronic Pain India provides a platform for individuals to openly share experiences and coping strategies. This encourages others to share their stories and helps eliminate stigma surrounding chronic pain.
CONNIE GODINHO
Founder: Connie’s Hooks & Yarns
CONNIE GODINHO

Connie Godinho's life took an unexpected turn during her birthday celebration when she visited her village of Saligao, Goa in 2011. A graduate in Business Management, Connie had spent eight years working in the Gulf, but fate had other plans for her.

While visiting the local church that fateful day, Connie was struck by a bus, causing a permanent disability that left her lower limbs paralyzed. Undeterred, a resilient 32-year-old Connie saw it as the wish of God, determined to rebuild her life despite the challenges. After a few years of struggle, Connie found the strength to pick herself up and restart her journey.

Around four years post the accident, Connie sought solace and purpose in the art of crochet. Starting with small projects like coasters and doilies, she discovered joy in creating beauty with just threads and needles, using her hands to weave intricate designs. Little did she know that this newfound passion would become a source of inspiration and financial independence.

As fate would have it, Connie's path crossed with Goan artist Clarice Vaz, who envisioned creating entrepreneurial opportunities for the people of Saligao. Clarice invited Connie to participate in the 'Made in Saligao' market, an initiative aimed at providing a platform for locals to sell their homemade products. This encouragement became the catalyst for Connie to step out of her comfort zone and showcase her crochet creations.
Before the Covid era, Connie experienced a turning point at a market in 2019. Her handmade crochet items, from earrings to stuffed toys and Christmas decor, under her brand Connie’s Hooks & Yarns, gained attention and appreciation.

Orders flooded in not only from Goa but also from across India and abroad. With the help of social media platforms like Facebook and Instagram, Connie's creations reached a global clientele, including Goans living in the UK, US, Canada, Netherlands, and the Middle East.

Connie's daughter, Susanna, played an integral role in the growing success of her mother's venture. She helped with photography, to capture the beauty of Connie's creations for online platforms.

Despite the physical challenges, Connie dedicated hours to perfecting her craft, ensuring the use of quality materials such as cotton thread for her creations. A year ago, Connie's husband, Mario Godinho, decided to leave his job in the Gulf to support his wife. Together, they formed a close-knit team, with Susanna contributing to the business while pursuing her studies. The family found joy in creating a small world where they supported and uplifted each other through thick and thin.

At 44, Connie Godinho embodies resilience and determination. Through her crochet art, she found financial independence and a testament to her unwavering spirit. Facing challenges with a smile, she encourages others: "Never give up. See adversity as an opportunity to shine."

RUKAYA AKBER
Owner: Retail store
RUKAYA AKBER

Rukaya Akber originally from Kashmir, India was adored by all in her family. A few months after her 14th birthday, someone from the family noticed that she had difficulty standing. A devastating diagnosis followed: polio had paralyzed her legs. This marked a series of challenges for Rukaya. Her first casualty was her education, as she had to drop out of school due to mobility issues. Additionally, her family had financial constraints and could not afford a wheelchair for her. In Kashmir's conservative society, where superstitions prevailed, Rukaya was often ridiculed and deemed a 'curse' or 'bad omen.'

But over time Rukaya Akber defied all odds. With her father as her only pillar of support, she decided to set up a grocery shop in front of her home and also began shawl embroidery as a second stream of income. By the age of 21, she was earning a respectable living with dignity, proving that she could pursue her dreams and turn them into reality.

Today, Rukaya at the age of 33 is the proud owner of her retail store and plans to expand her business to a nearby town and employ more women with disabilities. As a successful entrepreneur, Rukaya has been a role model for her community.

She is also the coordinator of G-20, a group of women with disabilities from Baramulla, a frontier district in the north of Himalayan territory of Kashmir.
Reflecting on her journey, Rukaya acknowledges the support of her father and her participation in the Entrepreneurship Development Training Program offered by the NEDAR Foundation through NSIC, which equipped her with essential business skills.

However, she laments the lack of support from the government, highlighting her struggle to receive her monthly pension of INR 1,000 due to issues with 'digitization.'

Rukaya's story is a testament to her resilience and determination to overcome obstacles. From being carried on her father's shoulders to becoming a successful entrepreneur, she has travelled a long and challenging road, inspiring others with her perseverance and strength.
SANGITA THAKUR

If someone were to write an epitaph to Sangita, it would undoubtedly be headlined “Happy Soul”. Unperturbed by life’s challenges, she embraced each curveball with enthusiasm, thriving on the adrenaline rush of overcoming obstacles.

Sangita’s journey with disabilities began at age 7, although formal diagnosis came much later, with the advancements in medical research. Initially considered cases of myopathy, Sangita and her elder brother eventually received a diagnosis of Spinal Muscular Atrophy (SMA), a condition for which there is no cure, despite recent discoveries of expensive treatments. Concurrently, her hearing impairments also became apparent with both disabilities being progressive. However, Sangita views this as a blessing, because it allowed her a normal childhood, of course with limitations.

During her formative years, the term “special” was not a term associated with disability, which led to Sangita’s advocacy for mainstreaming of disabled children. “You learn to swim against the tide," she says. “It makes you stronger, resilient and competitive. You compete in the same pool of talent, learn to thrive, not just survive.”

Excelling academically and in extra-curricular activities, Sangita’s leadership qualities shone through, as the secretary of the student council of her school. Consistently awarded general proficiency, she earned recognition as a gifted theatre actor, orator and painter. However, this did not come without moments of depression and loneliness as her disabilities progressed. College brought new challenges as Sangita ventured out of her hometown, Patna, supported by her determined mother's desire for her independence.
Despite social isolation due to her hearing impairment, and feeling like her dreams of pursuing theatre and being a leader in college were far-fetched, Sangita’s supportive friends remained her steadfast anchor.

She also started facing increased difficulty in walking long distances and other such physical activities. One by one, Sangita saw her career options dwindle as societal perceptions deemed them unattainable due to her disabilities. Nevertheless, she persisted and got accepted into the Indian Institute of Mass Communication, New Delhi, where she specialised in advertising and public relations, after being dissuaded from pursuing law, theatre or academia.

Stepping into the world of corporate communications marked a leap of faith, both for her and her employers. After facing multiple rejections from prospective companies due to her disabilities she began her tenure at Hindustan Times Patna, which, spanning over a decade, saw her script a success story while simultaneously championing causes in the disability sector as the media representative for the Rehabilitation Council of India. She broke the story on the scams in disability certification at the Patna Civil Surgeon’s office. Breaking barriers, she thrived in the communications industry despite being profoundly deaf.

Following marriage and motherhood, she returned to the corporate world, first as Director Media & Strategy with a leading PR firm and then as a communications specialist for an urban poverty alleviation program with the Government of Delhi, which received the CAPAM gold in 2010. Excelling as a group editor and managing editor of custom publications in her next stint, she spent a decade managing top professional communities such as CFO India, India Now, Democratic World, Perspective, and the Aware Consumer, showcasing her expertise in strategic communications. She has also established Ashtavakra Accessibility, which has been officially registered as a Limited Liability Partnership (LLP).

SHENAZ HAVELIWALA
Founder: Le Garden-The Salad Company
SHENAZ HAVELIWALA

In the quiet corridors of memory, Shenaz's journey unfolds a tale scripted by the abrupt twists of fate. Once a promising engineering student, she revelled in the simplicity of her easy childhood and academic prowess until the second year of college thrust her into an unforeseen battle. Amidst the frenzy of submissions and exams, a nervous breakdown became a tipping point, plunging her into a world where exams were no longer life's sole challenges.

At the age of 19, a fever spiked to 104 degrees, and an unremembered night in the ICU marked the onset of a new reality epilepsy. The once vibrant student faced a daunting year-long sabbatical, later resigning from academia due to relentless seizures and the toll of medications. Sensitive to sound, these triggered episodes confining her to the safety of her home.

In search of a solution, Shenaz embarked on a diverse journey, from religious rituals to international consultations. Finding solace in the shared struggles of fellow epilepsy warriors, she pursued medical advice and underwent a temporal lobe surgery in Kerala. This decision marked a new chapter in her life, leading to the recognition of her resilience with several awards at the hospital and connecting her with the Indian Epilepsy Association.

As dreams of engineering faded, Shenaz sought a different path. Rejections in the job market fueled her determination, leading her to establish "Sobo Connect" (So’ means South, and ‘Bo’ refers to Bombay) in 2008, by transforming her father's old warehouse into budget-friendly conference halls and workspaces. The creation of Sobo Connect was just one step in her journey towards independence. Her resilience found another outlet.
she ventured into selling salads online called, Le Garden-The Salad Company, turning her passion for healthy living into a thriving business.

As a health-conscious individual who prioritises nutritious eating, she cultivated microgreens at home and crafted salads from the harvest. The idea to sell these salads online was sparked at a family function when someone inquired about a salad that she made. Recognising the broad market potential, Shenaz decided to venture into the online salad business. With numerous interested clients, she took the initiative to establish Le Garden-The Salad Company in 2017 after obtaining the necessary licences. Positive feedback and financial success quickly followed, affirming the viability of the home-based business. As a testament to her entrepreneurial spirit, she was recognised by Microsoft as 'Commercial Entrepreneur of the Year' in 2018 through the Nipman Foundation.

Despite this daunting prognosis, Sumarty refused to succumb to despair. However, the whispers and stares of others led her to withdraw from school, fearing judgement as a wheelchair-bound student. In her own words, she described feeling "lifeless, a living corpse."

Yet, resilience burned within her. At 19, she took a bold step and established her own boutique in her neighbourhood, named "Naina".
